

In the Footprints of Richard Jefferies

By Philip Edward Thomas

This article first appeared in the New Age on 2 April 1896. It is the first essay on Jefferies that Edward Thomas published.

Coate is a name which has probably little significance for the mass of Englishmen; yet it may well be conjectured that this little hamlet will one day attain the celebrity, not to say sanctity, now enjoyed by the Hampshire village of Selborne. For Coate is the birthplace of Richard Jefferies.

We set out on a pilgrimage, beginning with a journey by rail to Swindon Junction—where the traveller has no longer to wait for the "ten minutes," familiar but not dear in the days of old.<sup>1</sup> From the railway station we go up the steep hill leading to the "Old Town," passing on the way a stone-built house in Victoria-street, where Jefferies lived for some time after his marriage.<sup>2</sup> We are here surrounded by many associations connected with the writer, who had to die in order to give life to his works. His friend Mr. William Morris, mentioned, in Besant's Eulogy, a former editor of the Swindon Advertiser, had his offices in the same street; and close at hand is the office of the North Wilts Herald, on which Jefferies served his apprenticeship as a reporter.

Leaving the town, we first take to the fields by a narrow stile near "The Lawn," the residence of "Squire Goddard." The footpath, often trod by Jefferies himself, winds pleasantly athwart broad undulating fields of pasture and mowing grass, through stiles and gateways, past dense hedges with their ash trees and pollard willows, and after a few minutes' walk the place of our pilgrimage comes in sight. The path rejoins the main road, and almost immediately opposite is Coate Farm, where Jefferies first saw the light. By no means a striding farmstead, it is almost hidden by a high brick wall and a thick screen of pollarded limes, though actually facing the highway leading from Swindon to Marlborough. The gateway, low and arched, is guarded by lilac and laburnum, and near at hand are the trees of the orchard. The old-fashioned, appearance of the house is somewhat impaired by the slated roof, but the "skilling" and cluster of farm-buildings are thatched and moss grown, with ivy clinging to their weather-stained walls. Under the eaves, as of old, martins have placed their mud nests, and all through the village they are visible almost at every turn.

Coate itself, lying at the foot of the Liddington Hills, is a straggling little place with quaint old cottages, a modernised inn, called the "Sun," and farmhouses standing some way back from the road. By the roadside is the narrow brooklet in which Jefferies was delighted to note an especial charm of glitter, and where great yellow marigolds grew in May amid the flags at the water-side.

---

<sup>1</sup> From 1842 to 1895 all trains had to make a compulsory ten minutes refreshment stop at Swindon station. Under the terms of leasing the Swindon Junction Hotel and Refreshment Rooms, the lessees had secured this arrangement that was to run for 99 years. In 1895 the GWR bought out the hotel company for £100,000 and dropped the 10 minute break.

<sup>2</sup> Jefferies only lived in Old Town for a year from late April 1875.

At the back of the Farm, and hidden by close-growing ash and chestnut, lies the Reservoir, styled more poetically by Jefferies “the mere,” embosomed among swelling meadows and shadowing trees. Here in the “old punt” the youthful Jefferies loved to wander, searching for “Calypso’s cave ... and the Immortals ... hiding somewhere still in the woods.”<sup>3</sup> One recognises the place in the passage where he describes the voyage in the rickety boat with “Orion” the shepherd.<sup>4</sup>

Past the low but steep bluff of sand, rising sheer out of the water, drilled with sand martins’ holes and topped by a sapling oak in the midst of a great furze bush. ... Past the barley that came down to the willows by the shore, ripe and white under the bright sunshine, but yonder beneath the shadow of the elms with a pale tint of amber. Past broad rising meadows, where under the oaks on the upper ground the cattle were idly lying out of the sultry heat. Then the barren islands strewn with stones and mussel-shells glistening in the sunshine. ... till presently she floated into the bay beneath the firs. There a dark shadow hung over the black water—still and silent; so still that even the aspens rested from their rustling.<sup>5</sup>

These words are charmingly true to the life as we float upon the broad bosom of the lake with its osier islets and dense beds of lofty iris. Round about the waterside is many a nook where the youthful nature-lover often dreamed and pondered, shadowed by a leaf-woven canopy, and with the fragrance of woodbine drifting in through the hawthorns. Or again, along the rushy bank, where the greensward stretches to the water’s edge, decked with cuckoo flowers and forget-me-nots, he was wont to loiter, watching the wavelets lapping the low marge or the pennon willow leaves flashing in the sun.

Away on the southern horizon the ridge of Liddington Hills is clearly outlined, marked by a clump of storm-driven beeches, known as a landmark for miles around. Every year the bird-nesters search the “Plain” (or plateau) for lapwings’ eggs, and it was here and in the immediate neighbourhood, lying on the slopes of the ancient tumuli, that Jefferies meditated the thoughts expressed in The Story of My Heart. After the exhilarating ascent, he says:

There was an intrenchment on the summit, and going down into the fosse, I walked round it slowly to recover breath. On the south-western side there was a spot where the outer bank had partially slipped, leaving a gap. There the view was over a broad plain beautiful with wheat, and inclosed by a perfect amphitheatre of green hills. ... Woods hid the scattered hamlets, so that I was quite alone.<sup>6</sup>

There, then, and close at hand, Jefferies lived some of the most exalted moments of his life.

In another direction lies Burderop Wood, where the keepers were doubtless intimate acquaintances of Jefferies and his unconscious models. A narrow footway leads to a hillside cluster of cottages, and on every hand Spring scatters her daintiest gifts. Pale wind anemones spangle the slopes and hedgemounds, and the violet hides amid the herbage growing about the

---

<sup>3</sup> The Amateur Poacher by Richard Jefferies, 1879, Ch 2.

<sup>4</sup> Orion was not a shepherd but a travelling companion in The Amateur Poacher, Ch1: “I call him Orion because he was a hunter and had a famous dog.”

<sup>5</sup> The Amateur Poacher, Ch2.

<sup>6</sup> The Story of My Heart by Richard Jefferies, 1883.

stately ash and far-spreading oaks. In June, about the open glades grown with sweet turf and bracken, we have seen the ghostly nightjar wheel, and the kestrel hover in his mid-day course. On the opposite side of Burderop, and well known to all the country-side, is Ladder Hill, with its steep primrose-dappled inclines and grass carpets pranked with exquisite bird's-foot lotus, whose beauties Jefferies so eloquently celebrates. The huge time-stained boulders that are met with here and there form convenient resting-places after the climb, and all around at midsummer the brier hedges are flushed with sweet wild roses.

Nestling on the sides of the downs are hill villages whither Jefferies wandered in his endless walks. Such are Chiseldon and Wroughton. About the thyme-scented hill-tops overlooking these hamlets are lanes and field-paths that lead the wanderer on many a delightful ramble. Here among the trees, stirring from the breath of the roving wind, and beneath the hot sun-glow, we may fitly remember the words and spirit of The Amateur Poacher: "A something that the ancients called divine may be found and felt there."<sup>7</sup>

---

<sup>7</sup> The final sentence from The Amateur Poacher.